

Munir Abu Arar

is a social worker and social entrepreneur advancing education, welfare, employment, and Jewish-Arab dialogue. He serves as the director of the welfare department of the Kuseife municipality. He previously led professional training for the Rayan employment center network. He is a co-founder and member of the board of directors of Standing Together. He holds a bachelor's degree in social work and a master's degree in policy and public administration from Ben-Gurion University of the Negev and is a graduate of the flagship leadership training program of the Israel Association of Community Centers. He lives in Ar'ara BaNegev and is the father of six children is co-director of the shared society initiative at the AJEEC Negev Institute and facilitates the East Negev's women's leadership forum. She worked leading groups in various frameworks, including mixed groups of youth in the AJEEC-Israel Scouts joint program, groups of Jewish and Arab teachers, and also student groups in the Rothschild Ambassadors leadership program at Sapir College. She holds a bachelor's degree in health systems management and is a master's student in gender studies at Tel Aviv University. Originally from Lod, she now lives in Rahat. She is married and the mother of two girls.

Khawla Al Tury

Avi Asaban

is the founder and CEO of DNAidea, a management consulting company that specializes in the public sector, and co-founder of the worKits initiative, a digital platform for acquiring job skills. He founded the VESPA model for public initiatives. He is in active reserve service as a organizational and strategic consultant in the IDF Northern Command and a facilitator at the IDF Dado Center for Interdisciplinary Military Studies. Previously, he served as the founding CEO of the Civil Society Forum (a public benefit corporation), the deputy director of the Jewish Statesmanship Center, the director of collaborative processes at Sheatufim, and the supervisor of strategy and marketing at the Ministry of the Economy's headquarters for regional development. He holds a master's degree in public policy and a bachelor's degree in political science and education from Hebrew University. He is married to Ronit and the father of four. He lives in Pardes Hanna-Karkur.

Steven Blonorovich

is the marketing director at the Fund for Innovative Education, as well as an author and lecturer. He comes from the informal education field, where he specialized in closing socioeconomic gaps and dealing with complicated circumstances. Over the last decade, he has held key leadership positions in social-educational institutions, such as area leadership director for Israel Scouts, marking and alumni director of Amit La'Derech, and national activities director at Hoshen. He wrote the LGBT romance novel Dog, Bear, and Soda (Niv Books, 2021). He holds a master's degree in educational administration and policy from Tel Aviv University and a bachelor's degree in education and arts from the Open University. He lives on the border of Ramat Gan and Bnei Brak.

Alon Elharar

is an attorney, legal advisor to the President of the National Labor Court, and researcher. He is also the director of the Jerusalem district at the Chai Bahem organization, which operates a Torah and legal research institute. He clerked in the Office of the State Attorney. He previously served as a research assistant and teaching assistant at Ono Academic College. An ordained community rabbi, he is completing a master’s degree in law in the “Law and Other Languages” program. He holds a bachelor’s degree in law and is studying for an additional bachelor’s degree in philosophy, political science, and economics at the Open University. He is married and the father of two. He lives in Jerusalem.

Michael Gnassia

is a senior advisor to the Labor Minister and supervises the National Insurance Institute of Israel. Previously he led field work in the Haredi sector for the ELEM organization. He led the Nachshon program for Haredi career development at Jerusalem’s Young Adult Center. He founded and led the Askola program to support undergraduate education for Haredi educators who are teaching core subjects. He had a meaningful part in writing the founding documents for the Haredi Youth Center and founded and led its career development field. He is an active participant in various forums advancing connections across societal divisions. He holds a bachelor’s degree in education from Herzog College. He is an alumnus of the Mandel Haredi Leadership Program and of the Maoz Ashmurat Program. He has also learned in various Torah institutions in Israel and the United States, including the Beth Medrash Gova of Lakewood, Bais Medrash of Central Jersey, and the Shehebar Sephardic Center kollel. He is married and the father of four. He lives in Kiryat Ye’arim.

Raefa Hakroush

is the national field manager at the Children and Youth Out-of-Home Placement Commission in the Welfare Ministry. She is a couple's and family therapist and group facilitator. She is a social activist in the field of interreligious dialogue, including as a member of the shared community-building group at the Leo Baeck Education Center in Haifa. She previously worked in various positions in the social work field, including senior juvenile officer and area supervisor in the Welfare Ministry. She developed projects in the Arab sector to empower women and youth and integrate them into the workforce. She holds a master's degree in criminology and a bachelor's degree in social work. She is the mother of two and lives in Haifa.

Muhamad Halil

heads the community center in Bi'ina through the Israel Association of Community Centers. Previously he led shared society initiatives at Shatil, where he worked in project development and inter-organization networking. He also led the network of Yeadim centers for youth and community in Arab and Jewish society for the Rashi Foundation, in partnership with local authorities and government ministries. He holds a master's degree in public administration from Haifa University and a bachelor's degree in informal education and history from Beit Berl College. He is an alumnus of the Mandel program for educational leadership. He is married and the father of three. He lives in Bi'ina.

Rotem Kama

is field director at Teach First Israel. He leads learning and development for an intensive TFI training course for academics becoming teachers in the social periphery, with the goal of showing every child that they can choose their future without regard to where they come from. He worked as an educator and teacher at the democratic Kehila school and led a number of educational programs in Israel and the UK. He holds a master’s degree with honors in curriculum development, pedagogy, and assessment from University College London. For his thesis, he researched dual-language schools in Israel and sought to examine the way in which relationships produce, reproduce, or undermine social inequality. He lives in Tel Aviv.

Shoshana Teitelbaum

is a psychologist specializing in rehabilitation at the National Institute of Neuropsychological Rehabilitation. She serves as an emotional and cognitive therapist and group facilitator. Previously she was a children’s therapist at Hadassah Medical Center. She holds master’s and bachelor’s degrees in psychology from Ariel University and the Open University. She is an alumna of the Mandel Haredi leadership program. Her capstone project dealt with education for successful marriage and preventing religious and spiritual violence. She is married and the mother of three. She lives in Jerusalem.

Michal Kohn Orovano

is the coordinator of the Gishurim program to advance community dialogue in mixed cities and in shared life spaces at the Mosaica organization. She works with local authorities to establish the infrastructure to help establish dialogue in emergencies and routine times, to provide an answer to various conflicts in the public space, and to prevent violent incidents. She worked for many years at Gesher, advancing meetings and dialogue between different Jewish communities. She holds a bachelor's degree in education and sociology-anthropology from Hebrew University. She is completing a master's degree in conflict management and resolution at Bar Ilan University. She is married and lives in Jerusalem serves as a legal advisor at the National Labor Court. She clerked in the legal office of the National Security Council. Before that, she was an analyst in the governance and social affairs division of the Prime Minister's Office and a research assistant at the Shalom Hartman Institute. She is one of the founders of the Reservists' Wives' Forum, established during the Iron Swords War. She holds master's ("Law and Other Languages" program) and bachelor's degrees in law from Hebrew University and a bachelor's degree in humanities, philosophy, and Jewish philosophy from Shalem College. She is married and the mother of three. She lives in Jerusalem.

Merav Lemberger

Sharon Michaeli Ramon

is an educator and activist who works in reality-based learning. She is the principal of the Tel Aviv School for Nature, Environment, and Society. She previously headed the “All of Us Together” Jewish-Arab elementary school in Jaffa. She has worked on guidance and team development, in emergency preparedness, and in global humanitarian assistance. She is an expert in emergency situations, societal resilience, and resilience in learning. As a lieutenant colonel (res.) in the IDF Homefront Command, she serves as the population field commander for the Tel Aviv region. Originally from Haifa, today she lives in Ramat Gan with her partner, two children, and a few pets.

Yitzhak Mor

is a doctoral candidate in religious studies at Hebrew University and a Rotenstreich scholar at the Mandel School for Advanced Studies. Yitzhak also serves as secretary of the Hebrew University Center for the Study of Christianity. Previously, he was among the founders of Hashiloach, an Israeli journal for thought and policy, and wrote content for the President of Israel. He served as a parliamentary advisor in the Knesset and worked as a business intelligence analyst. He holds a bachelor’s degree in philosophy, political science, and economics and a master’s degree in religious studies from Hebrew University. He is married and the father of three. He lives in Jerusalem.

Esti Ohana

is a prosecutor in the Supreme Court department in the Office of the State Attorney. She previously clerked for Supreme Court Judge Isaac Amit. Earlier, Esti was an educator and worked as a music teacher in various educational frameworks. She holds two master’s degrees in law, one of which in the “Law and Other Languages” program, from Hebrew University, a bachelor’s degree in law from Ono Academic College (haredi women’s track), as well as a bachelor’s degree in music education. She is married to a rosh kollel and mother of two pairs of twins. She lives in Jerusalem.

Gilad Rubinstein

heads the Judaism, Society, and State program at the Manor Center, where he deals with the formulation of a worldview for Israeli centrism and leads policy research. He has a range of experience in the fields of education, research, and public policy and in working with government, academia, and societal stakeholders. Previously he served as head of the education and academia division at the Zalman Shazar Center, where he led various initiatives in Israel and abroad. In addition, he led a program for young intellectual leadership at the Van Leer Institute and taught at Hebrew University and in many other frameworks. He holds a master’s degree in Jewish history and contemporary Judaism and a bachelor’s degree in psychology and history, both with honors from Hebrew University. He is an alumnus of the Mandel School for Advanced Study in the Humanities. He is married and the father of two. He lives in Jerusalem.